

Doesn't seem a month since we put together issue 46.....Which kept us tremendously busy. Seems our members are huge fans of Linda Jane Smith and her fabulous 'Cats'

Thank you all for your many requests and suggestions. We'll cover as many of your suggested articles as we can over the next few months. Your contributions are always appreciated.

THE OFFICIAL UK PUZZLE CLUB

Donald Fraser Gould McGill,

(28 January 1875 – 13 October 1962) was an English graphic artist whose name has become synonymous with a whole genre of saucy seaside postcards that were sold mostly in small shops in British coastal towns. The cards feature an array of attractive young women, fat old ladies, drunken middle aged men, honeymoon couples and vicars.

He has been called 'The King Of The Saucy Postcard', and his work is still collected and appreciated for his artistic skill, its power of social observation and earthy sense of humour. Even at the height of his fame he only earned three guineas a design, but today his original artwork can fetch thousands of pounds.

McGill was born in London in 1875. He lost a foot in a school rugby accident, and, having studied at Blackheath Proprietary School, spent most of his life in the Blackheath area of south-east London (living at 5 Bennett Park, SE3 - a blue plaque location).

He was a naval draughtsman until his career in postcards began accidentally in 1904 when an in-law encouraged him after seeing an illustrated get-well card he had made for a sick nephew. Within a year it was his full-time occupation. He studied art and married the daughter of the owner of Crowder's Music Hall in Greenwich.

McGill spent virtually the whole of his career creating the distinctive colour washed drawings which were then reproduced as postcards. He ranked his output according to their vulgarity as mild, medium and strong, with strong being much the best sellers. His family however was steadfastly respectable. He said of his two daughters: "They ran like stags whenever they passed a comic postcard shop".

During the First World War he produced anti German propaganda in the form of humorous post cards.

In 1941, the renowned author and commentator George Orwell wrote an essay on his work entitled "The Art of Donald McGill". Orwell stated that he was not sure if McGill was a real person or simply a trade name.

At the age of 80, McGill fell foul of several local censorship committees which culminated in a major trial held in Lincoln on 15 July 1954. The charge was breaking the 1857 Obscene Publications Act. He was eventually found guilty and made to pay a £50 fine and £25 costs. The wider result was a devastating blow to the saucy postcard industry. Many postcards were destroyed as a result and retailers cancelled orders. Several of the smaller companies were made bankrupt as they survived on very small margins.

In the late 1950s, the level of censorship eased off and the market recovered. In 1957, McGill gave evidence before the House Select Committee set up in order to amend the 1857 Act.

Over the span of his career McGill produced an estimated 12,000 designs, of which 200 million copies are estimated to have been printed. He died in 1962 with all his designs for the 1963 season already prepared. He was buried in Streatham Park Cemetery. Despite their wide circulation, McGill earned no royalties from his designs; in his will, his estate was valued at just £735.

One of his postcards, "Do you like Kipling?" "I don't know, you naughty boy, I've never kiplped!" holds a world record for selling the most copies at over 6,000,000.

Our Star Letter

What about a savings club? For Christmas or presents through the year. Send what amount you can afford, so when you have enough money saved you fill in an advance payment form and wait for the puzzles to arrive. We used to do something like this at our school (but that was books) we sent money through the year and when we had enough in the pot, we filled in an order form and sent it off. Well with the credit crunch and people being careful with their money, it could help them out as well as yourselves. They could make payments on line or through the post etc. Don't know if this would help out O.A.Ps, one parent, low wage earners etc. who would love puzzles but find it hard or just out of their reach.

Mrs Elaine Rivers-Blackheath.

If this idea would help our members, then we would gladly instigate it. So do let us know if Elaine's idea is something you would like to do . We would need to set up an accounting system to deal with this so let us know your views and we'll sort it.

I thought club members would like to hear about my 'jigsaw table'. It is quite the best present I have had this year. Using my boards, I can easily manage 500pc & 1000pc jigsaws in the comfort of my arm chair. When not in use, for 'jigging' I can use it as a table for my meals, tilt it to comfortably read a book or a newspaper or write letters to my favourite club! My Grandson found it on 'Jigthings' website and bought it for me for my birthday. I know you sell the 'Jigthings' range and wondered if you would make it available to our fellow members?

Helen Rendell-Mousehole

We have spoken to 'Jigthings' and intend to add this to our range in September. It is not cheap, but has lots of uses and benefits which we will go into in issue 48. We will also cover the other items in their range for the benefit of our newer members. Many thanks for passing this on.

JIG'S CORNER

QUESTIONS, INFORMATION & MORE

Had a bit of a problem over the last month! Lou has taken a dislike to 'CATS'. And everyone here kept talking about them. She protects her garden like a 'sentry' and wow betide anything other than a squirrel that tries to get in. Every time someone mentioned cats she tore outside like a thing possessed! So if you're still after 'Crazy Cats' talk quietly.

Q) I came across a brochure in one of my puzzles by Ravensburger, but when I enquired I was told these were not available in the UK?

A) Ravensburger UK has their own range. Occasionally they will choose some from the German catalogue, but mostly they have a more 'UK' range.

Q) I prefer to do 500pc jigsaws as I can sit and work these on a tray. There are some really nice pictures in 1000pc. Would these be available in 500?

A) As far as I'm aware, there is just one manufacturer that we deal with at present that produces a jigsaw in more than one size. I guess that's because 1000pc jigsaws are by far the best sellers. However, we've taken note of the many requests for 500pc jigsaws and feature these monthly in our newsletter previews.

She's off on her holidays again in August, so although we will have a skeleton staff, the office may be unmanned from time to time between 16th - 30th August. She's sure to keep in touch so if you do get the answer service, do leave a message and we'll get back to you.

AND LASTLY – JIGPIN News...

Proofs on its way. Could be good to go in September!

Thanks for the support- already got a bunch of requests - but no prices yet!

Whilst the Cats away!!!

We'll be having a 'puzzling' time!
